

PUPPET MAKING WORKSHOP:

TOY THEATER and PUPPETS INSPIRED BY CLEMENTINE HUNTER

Have fun imagining the world inside a painting and bringing it to life!

Sat. February 27, 2010 | 10 am-noon
For Children

Calliope Puppets' Karen Konnerth directs a two-hour workshop for children, leading them to use puppetry to bring to life their own stories inspired by the Ogden Museum of Southern Art collection.

For this workshop, the inspiration is Clementine Hunter's paintings. (Image shown here: Cotton to Gin.)

Children will look at Hunter's paintings and "animate" scenes from them. Focusing on one element of the painting, children will recreate the background with simple materials, then build quick-rod puppets of the painting's people, as well as dream up dialogue for a short performance. Children will leave with a toy theater stage and the puppets they create.

This is part of a series of workshops directed by Calliope Puppets. Each workshop will feature a different puppetry technique, so they may be taken as a series, or individually. Through these workshops, children will learn about Southern artists and art traditions.

FEE: $20 (Museum members); $25 (non-members). Fees includes materials.
